

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to air a documentary on Kerry days before the election is a noble gesture and a clear example of the courage of certain broadcasters to seek the truth. As far as I know Sinclair also offered John Kerry and the Democratic party the option of addressing what is portrayed in the movie and they declined. This is totally unlike Michael Moore's "Fahrenheit 9/11" to which George Bush and the Republicans were not invited to respond, if it is shown on HBO or PAY-FOR TV.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. I believe that they are doing so with this movie.

Thank you.
